The AGA KHAN presided yesterday afternoon at a meeting at the Savoy Hotel, organized by the Aligarh Society and the Jami'at ul-Muslimeen, London, to mourn the loss of Lord Headley, the leading British Moslem. He described Lord Headley as a gentleman, a nobleman, and an Englishman of English blood, and a Moslem of Moslems who well understood and carried out that forbearance, gentleness and kindness which was laid down as a guiding rule for every good Moslem. Lady Headley and the new peer took part in the meeting. A "Headley Memorial Council" was set up to determine the best form of permanent memorial and to collect funds for the purpose.
